

Artist Betty Laur

Betty doesn't merely want to capture an image with paints and brushes; rather, with thoughtful, colorful strokes, she wants to transport her viewers to a tranquil place. She thoroughly researches each subject she plans to recreate on canvas, because she wants her paintings to accurately reflect the tropical beauty she sees in the world around her. She feels her paintings represent a feeling of overall well-being and serenity, capturing a wide range of nature.

From being selected by the Historical Society of Palm Beach County, Florida for a 5-month exhibit at the Johnson History Museum in West Palm Beach depicting the 1928 hurricane's 8-foot high wave that devastated Lake Okeechobee and the West Palm Beach area, to her designation as Master Class Plus Artist by American Juried Art Salon.com after being juried into two of their international competitions, Betty has become known for her tropical oil paintings. She finds constant inspiration from the lush, tropical setting of South Florida.

Betty is committed to continually learn and develop her talent, and has found that the best way to improve is through constant practice and trying new techniques and materials. Betty was born in Jefferson County, Illinois, and currently resides in Palm Beach Gardens, Florida.
